

DISAPPEARANCE OF LOWENSTEIN STILL A MYSTERY

Theories As to His Fate
Abound in Large Numbers

SUICIDE TALK RIDICULED

Theory of Planned Hoax Is Generally Discredited

LONDON, July 7.—(INS)—Theories as to the fate of Capt. Alfred Loewenstein, the Belgian "Croesus" of the financial world, still abounded today, at his mysterious disappearance remained unexplained.

The original theory that the financial wizard accidentally pushed open an outer door of his plane and fell from the plane to his death received a severe setback yesterday. Tests were made in a similar Fokker plane which showed that the air pressure would have made it almost impossible for a man, no matter how strong, to unwittingly open the door he is supposed to have fallen through.

Suicide, the second hypothesis, was generally ridiculed by Loewenstein's friends. His financial affairs were in good order, there were no known personal troubles, and, it was pointed out, Loewenstein was not the type of man to run away from any kind of trouble. The latest theory is that Loewenstein had planned the disappearance himself, either as a hoax or for other reasons known only to himself. This theory is generally discredited.

"A Trans-Atlantic Passenger"

If plucky Amelia Earhart's heart fluttered in pride at the way New York welcomed her back home, she was too modest to admit it. She kept in the background as much as possible, insisting that her two companions, Wilmer Stultz and Lou Gordon, deserved all of the credit for the flight. "I was only a passenger," she added. The above picture was made after she had reached the suite of rooms provided for her by the city.

DE RISI PITCHES TEAM TO A SHUT-OUT VICTORY

Local Boy in Good Form

St. Ann's Team

WINS GAME BY 2 TO 0

Schedule for Tomorrow

St. Ann's Field at 3:30 P. M.
ST. ANN'S vs. FIELD CLUB

By T. M. Juno

De Risi was in good form here last night, pitching St. Ann's to their second shutout victory, their eighth straight victory of the season, their second straight of the second half, and to the lead of the second half, whitewashing the Leedom's nine by the score of 2 to 0.

The game was a closely-fought pitchers' battle between Brooks and De Risi. Brooks pitched a little better ball, allowing but three hits and issuing only one pass. De Risi allowed six hits but they were too widely scattered to cause any damage. He was in hot water many times but his mates came to the rescue to help him strengthen up. De Risi appeared to be getting stronger as the game took its course and ended in very good fashion, fanning the last three batters. Brooks' support was a bit wobbly.

"Al" Cooper made the best play of the evening when he pulled down De Risi's line drive in the fifth. The liner was ticketed for three bases. A few seconds later Cooper made a wonderful running catch of Fields' short fly. "Eddie" Roe played a nice game at short for the "Saints."

Leedom's drew a blank in their initial bat. Cooper flied to Paletta. Cochrane tapped in front of the plate and was thrown out by Stallone. Riola singled and went out trying to steal.

St. Ann's scored a run in their turn. Fields banged a hit between short and third. O'Riola sacrificed. Fields taking third. Roe hit to the pitcher and went out. Fields scoring. Paletta doubled. Stallone struck out.

White fanned to begin the carpet makers' second. Jeffries walked and was forced by Mangano. Callahan singled. Wilkerson rolled to Paletta.

The "Saints" were white-washed in the second. Seneca flied to Callahan. Missera reached first on Wilkerson's miscue. Pieor whiffed. De Risi's hard

RAINY WEATHER HASN'T HURT CROPS, HE SAYS

Wheat Crop and Fruit Are Doing Well in Bucks County

APPLE CROP IS LIGHT

DOYLESTOWN, July 7.—No serious results have been caused by the excess rainfall, County Agent W. F. Greenawalt said this morning when asked about the effect on agriculture.

"Rain has, of course, held farmers back to some extent, but the effect of the rain has probably been beneficial in controlling some of the insect pests. For instance, aphids and codling moth, which were bad this time last year, have not been so prevalent this season, but there has been more curculio. There is also some scab in certain places.

"I would say that the apple crop will be light this year, but that there will be a good peach crop in the county.

"The recent warm weather helped corn.

"Potatoes show a poor stand in some places.

"The wheat crop is maturing rapidly. The stand is not so good as normally, but otherwise it is all right.

"I'd say there were no serious results from the rainy season, but this last rain was not needed by the crops."

THREE HUNDRED GRADUATES EXPECTED TO RETURN TO NATIONAL FARM SCHOOL FOR THIRTIETH ANNUAL REUNION OF ALUMNI

Affair Will Last Two Days — New Athletic Field Will Be Formally Dedicated — Big Banquet Will Be Held This Evening — Band in New Costly Uniforms.

DOYLESTOWN, July 7.—Close to 300 graduates of National Farm School will have registered before today noon at the thirtieth annual reunion of the members of the alumni association of the school that will be featured this year with the formal dedication of Alumni Field, the new athletic field that has been under construction at the school for eight months.

The reunion will last two days and graduates from as far distant states as Texas have made reservations. Last night a large passenger bus brought thirty-five graduates from New York.

Today noon will be registration hour although many of the graduates arrived at the school last night and others came this morning. The first event of the reunion will be a baseball game at 2 o'clock today between the alumni and the varsity. A year ago the varsity won a close game, 7 to 5.

At 5:30 tonight there will be a band concert given by Farm School's new 36-piece band, newly uniformed in green and gold through the generosity of Charles Kline, Allentown, and Hirsch Weintraub, of Philadelphia, in suits that cost $1,500.

The annual banquet will take place at 6:30 tonight in Lasker Hall, with Herbert D. Allman, Philadelphia, president of the school, as the leading speaker. There will be members of the board of directors of the school present too. The toastmaster of the occasion will be James Work, Philadelphia, president of the alumni association.

An alumni dance will follow at 9 o'clock and a midnight show will be staged by the alumni at midnight that will be featured by a number of very fine vaudeville acts.

Sunday morning at 9 o'clock there will be a memorial service in the Joseph Krauskopf Memorial Library in memory of the late founder of the school, in whose memory the library was dedicated. This service will be conducted by alumni members.

There will be a business meeting for the election of officers on Sunday at 10 a. m., at which time a proposition of the alumni association to build a grandstand for the new athletic field will be discussed.

At 11 o'clock Sunday morning the formal dedication of Alumni Field will take place. About a year ago Samuel Samuels, head coach of Farm School, spent a week at State College with Coach Hugo Bezdek, where he secured ideas for the new field. The Farm School field is the same as the State College field in every detail.

The Farm School band leading the members of the alumni association will march over the field and there will be a formal dedication ceremony. The new field, costing close to $4,000, was entirely financed by graduates of Farm School. It is known as a turtle-back field with an 18-inch slope on each side that takes care of drainage. There has been a special irrigation system installed that consists of pipe lines and hose connection with sprinklers attached. Each sprinkler covers seventy feet of the field and in case of a dry spell, the field will be kept in excellent condition just the same.

There will be two outdoor basketball courts on the new field, several handball courts and a football field. This will give Farm School an athletic layout of two football fields and a very fine baseball diamond in addition to the other sports.

Along the highway next to the field has been planted a very fine flower garden. The athletic field was constructed by John Bailey & Bro., of Doylestown, and will be used for the first time at the opening of the football season next fall.

Mrs. Thompson has from time to time visited many pastorates, assisting with the service, and participating in the program herself. The chorus and solo work will be taken care of by members of the church and Sunday School. The outline follows:

"O, Where are the Reapers?" women's quartette, consisting of Mrs. Jennie Halk, Misses Grace H. Illick, Adeline E. Reetz, and Harriet Cox; "Bringing in the Sheaves," by a group of reapers; recitation, "The Neglected Call," Miss Ella Dunford; "Where Hast Thou Gleaned Today?" a vocal number with questioning by Miss Winifred A. Dicken, and answers by Misses Elizabeth Foster and Margaret Perry and Mrs. C. W. Haefner.

SUGGESTS AIRPORT OF SUITABLE SIZE FOR THIS BOROUGH

Edgar N. Gott, President of Keystone Plant, Advocates
Municipal Field

COMPANY WILL ASSIST

Hangars, Gasoline Stations,
Employees Will Be Provided
By Keystone Corp'n

Possible plans for a municipal airport have taken the attention of some of the foremost residents of Bristol, with an idea to placing Bristol "well on the map" and furthering the borough in every possible way.

Referring to the matter at his office in the plant of the Keystone Aircraft Corporation, here, today, Edgar N. Gott, president of company, said "I would like to see this community acquire landing field facilities."

Showing the willingness of the company he represents toward sponsoring the wished-for airport, Mr. Gott told that the Keystone plant would be glad to cooperate in every way possible, even to the extent of having their hangars, gasoline station, and other equipment located on same for the benefit of those who might use them, providing however the Keystone plant had the privilege of the use of same at all times. "We would likewise be ready to assist with the upkeep of the field, and have stationed there at all times one of our employees."

According to the representative of the Keystone Company the field owned and operated to the west of Bristol just now is of splendid service, but inadequate. "There are locations here which could be readily utilized. Bristol should have a good-sized airport, for you can't get aviators to stop here when there is not an adequate place to land."

The field of the Keystone plant contains only about 40 or 45 acres of ground. A field, according to Mr. Gott, should cover approximately 160 acres. "Such a field, when properly laid out in the direction of the prevailing winds, would provide a runway of 1000 to 2000 feet," he added. "On several occasions the field here has been used by visitors from other large centers. Several hundred have made use of it, and during a small snow-storm last winter it was a life-saver for Chamberlain. Like instances should prove to us all the advisability of laying out a suitable landing place."

General rules and regulations for the licensing of air ports and landing fields, effective July 1st of this year, contained the following:

"Basic requirements of airports—Suitable field or landing area: A firm and approximately level field with suitable approaches, well drained and without obstructions or depression presenting hazards in taking off or landing; or at least two landing strips 500 or more feet wide crossing or converging at angles of not less than 60 degrees. The landing strips must permit safe landing under ordinary weather conditions. If the sod or turf is not sufficiently firm and well drained for these purposes, the landing strips must be constructed of crushed rock, slag, asphalt, or some suitable materials, with a suitable binder when necessary. Roads shall not cross any part of the landing area, whether landing strips or open field. Neither the field nor the landing strips may have a rise of more than 3 inches in 10 feet, which corresponds to a grade of 2 1/2 per cent. The mean slope of the entire surface shall not be more than 1 1/2 per cent.

"Highway—The airport must be situated on a good road leading to the nearest city or town.

"Runways and drainage—Runways shall be not less than 100 feet wide. The edges of the runways must be flush with the rest of the landing strip, and shoulders of runways must be constructed of some porous material, such as crushed rock or gravel. Adequate drainage must be provided whether runways are used or whether the entire field is available for landing. If natural drainage is good, no artificial system will be required.

"Fuel, communication, and transportation—The airport must be provided with facilities for supplying aircraft with fuel, oil and water. It must have dependable communication and transportation facilities to the nearest city or town. Airport personnel must be in attendance by day or available on call by telephone at the airport. In the latter case the telephone booth or receptacle must also contain a directory and full directions for reaching such personnel.

Upon the equipment provided at the airport is the rating of the field listed. Requirements that are outstanding in the highest class of airport are first-aid equipment, weather instruments, (Continued on Page Four)

AN INDUSTRIAL MIRACLE

Recent observance by the Ford Motor Company of the twenty-fifth anniversary of its founding was more significant than interesting. There was little public interest in the age of the company, but in the remarkable growth of this great enterprise in the comparatively short time of a quarter century all saw the reflection of America's tremendous resources and industrial genius.

When Henry Ford formed his company in 1903 he sold only $28,000 of the authorized capital stock of $100,000. Production began in a small factory, in which only 311 men were employed. The first year's output was 1,708 cars.

Compare these first-year figures with Ford statistics for today and the final years of Model T production. The company's assets now run into hundreds of millions of dollars. There are huge factories and large assembling plants in many countries. There were 15,000,000 of the Model T Fords built, the daily production once reaching 9,000. Today the company has 200,000 employees.

While Ford factories were closed for the purpose of installing new machinery preparatory to changing models, the company's income did not stop. Vast bank deposits were earning interest, real estate was increasing in value and replacement parts and the last of the Model T cars were being sold. Money was coming into the corporation's treasury every minute that it was being poured into development of Model A.

But the Ford Motor Company is but a cog in the great American industrial system. Gigantic as it is, there are many such cogs in this system, and new ones are constantly in process of formation.

ATTACKING THE MISSISSIPPI

It was a little more than a month ago that the president, by attaching his signature, made a law of the act of congress which appropriated the necessary funds with which army engineers will attempt the work of controlling the flood water of the Mississippi. Had congress been less dilatory this very important piece of legislation would have come months before it did, but there have been no delays since congress acted.

The secretary of war has already approved the allocation of more than $21,000,000 for prosecution of control work. District engineers at St. Louis, Memphis, Vicksburg and New Orleans were immediately directed to proceed upon the preparation of plans and specifications for getting the work under way.

Of the amounts allocated, $9,000,000 will be used for relocations, $8,400,000 on main line levees, $1,500,000 for the Boone Care spillway and $2,000,000 for dredging and miscellaneous work.

As the work being inaugurated now had the approval of the Mississippi River Commission as well as of the board of engineers, it was not necessary to submit the plans to the special board provided by the new law to consider the engineering differences between the adopted army engineers' scheme and the plan of the commission.

It is hoped the flood control project will now be pushed to a speedy completion, and once finished there is little doubt in anyone's mind that man will be the master of heretofore untamed waters of this mightiest of American rivers.

Men don't actually fail because they knock; they knock because they have failed.

"TENDERLOIN," starring Dolores Costello, is a Warner Bros. picture-ization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Chuck White, the beau of the Boverly, is seated at a table in Kelly's Ringo Cafe, drinking beer with a man whom he addresses as "Sparrow." Sparrow reminds Chuck that he is due to "pull something big" later in the evening and cautions him to keep his mind on his work. The Beau has been boasting of the impression he has made on lovely Rose Shannon, one of "Kelly's Girls," with whom he has been dancing. Later Chuck takes Rose home. In her room he makes passionate love to her. She struggles in vain. In desperation she hurls a clock at him. He drops to the floor.

"Oh, God!" she murmured. "Oh, God, I've killed him!" She covered her mouth with her hand to keep from screaming aloud.
She seemed paralyzed. She couldn't even get the clock back onto the stand. She stood dazed, just gazing about, as though she scarcely knew where she was. She had killed him! She would be a murderer. They would hang her! Send her to the electric chair! She must do something. She must! She must. Stark, cold terror gripped her heart. And then a low moan came from the lips of the man on the floor. The clock dropped from her listless fingers. Its clatter made her jump. She felt as though some-bing was choking her. But he wasn't dead—he wasn't dead! Thank God!

Now she was slowly recovering her senses, and yet she couldn't move. All she could feel was a terrible hatred rising up within her, revolting her, making everything swim about her. Suppose he should come to while she was still there. She must get away. That was the thing to do. Get away quickly before he found her. He seemed to be moving a little more, now. She must find some means of escape from this man who might suddenly rise up and pursue her.

Mechanically she picked up the clock and set it back on the table with trembling hands. She must hurry, hurry. She looked about her, uneasily. Her bag—where was her bag. She would have to pack her clothes. It was raining. She must take some other clothes with her. She mustn't leave a thing behind—not a thing. No one must know where she had come—but where should she go? There was no place she knew. It was late. The Tenderloin at night terrified her. But she must go. The sheer feeling of being able to move added an impetus to her steps. She searched about and found an old, imitation-leather bag, that she had brought with her when she had first come to New York.

The search did not take many moments, for her belongings were pitifully few. As she threw them into the satchel, two large tears rolled down her cheeks, but she brushed her hand across her eyes. She drew on her coat, wrapping it closely about her, and pulled a tight black felt hat down over the soft curls. Grasping the satchel, she made for the door and opened it. She paused only a second to look at the figure stretched out there on the floor. Then in terror, she fled, closing the door behind her.

Down the stairs she went, tip-toeing silently, glancing back as though she feared some one might be following her every moment. Her shadow on the wall, dancing grotesquely, made her heart leap up into her mouth. She ran down the last flight of stairs, flung open the door, and looked up and down the street. Not a soul in sight—only the black darkness of the night. The dripping rain splashed monotonously into the still puddles. An elevated overhead cut the air with a shrill grinding on the wet rails. The noise startled her, and with a quick step she was out and running hastily along the gleaming pavement.

CHAPTER IV.

Through the thick, white mist that still hung heavy despite the slackening rain, the hands of the tall tower clock were barely discernible. Only the round, orange face that shone like a fallow moon in a pale sky was visible. But now the clanging bell tolled out two short beats, and then lapsed back into a death-like silence. Uptown the lights about Broadway were still twinkling, but down here through the Tenderloin everything seemed to sleep—everything, that is, save the policeman on the beat, the corner bank and a few all-night restaurants. And even they seemed to suggest that it might be better were they abed and out of the darkness of the storm.

A stray cat yowled miserably. On a side street the muffled roar of a motor slowly passed out of hearing. A bedraggled drunk, his cap pulled down over his eyes, lurched into a lamp post, righted himself, and moved on. The policeman eyed him for a moment and then turned his back.

Two men, one heavy-set, the other a slender racing-tout type, walked hurriedly along, their hands deep in the pockets of their overcoats. They scurried up the steps of the bank that sent forth this story: "Mercer National Bank, Open Day and Night." Cafe owners making their nightly deposits, the policeman decided, and sauntered along his rounds.

The two men swung open the bank door and walked over to the cashier's cage where, on the desk, rested a satchel. The teller, who had been standing in the enclosure going over some business with the cashier, looked up inquisitively. The heavy-set man reached into an inner pocket. Then suddenly the barrel of an automatic pistol loomed dark and forbidding. There was a curt command of "Hands up!" The teller opened his mouth as though to shout a warning, his hand shot over the top of the desk. A spurt of red flame; a slight crack like the pop of the cork on a bottle of champagne. The teller caught his shattered wrist with a moan of pain. The cashier flung up his hands without further ado.

"Hand it over!" A burly hand pushed open the bars of the cage and seized the satchel, thrusting it into the arms of his smaller companion. The two gangsters backed towards the door, the revolver still covering the terrified bank clerks. A shriek of a motor siren came from without. The automatic barked again. Then, with a short turn the two men were out of the door, across the sidewalk, and into the waiting machine. A final shot sent shattered plate glass flying. A shriek of skidding wheels, and the car was off and down the street.

A police whistle rang shrill and clear, cutting the night air. An automatic warning sounded, sending an armored car into immediate motion. Pop-pop-pop-pop! A hand machine gun blazed a screaming trail of death. A police car drove up in front of the bank. Five blue-coats jumped out and took up the trail on foot. Heads came suddenly forth from surrounding windows and then were jerked back again as the crack-crack of the guns filled the air. Sleeping bums scurried like rats for the protecting shelter of the alleyways. Only the black shadow of the holden car could be seen, skimming drunkenly as it skidded down the street at breakneck speed, closely followed by the armoured car.

In the first automobile a slender figure bent tensely over the steering wheel, his eyes set on the road ahead, his face twisted in grim determination. Beside him cowered the Sparrow, huddled down on the seat, his body trembling, his lips twitching in a frenzy of terror. In the rear of the car, lying on the floor for protection, the automatic, thrust through the side curtains, spitting an answering rain of bullets back towards the police car, rode "The Mug." His heavy, scarred face, with its protruding lower jaw, took on an apish look in the light of dashing street lamps.

"Git a move on! Aw, fer Gawd's sake, Lefty! Shore 'er up!" The Sparrow was pleading piteously as a round of bullets from the trailing car shattered the side of a brick building.
"Shut up, hoppy!" Lefty commanded from his position at the wheel, never taking his eyes from the road. "Lead holdin' out, Mug?" He flung the words back over his shoulder.
"Yeah!" The Mug returned laconically, spending his energies on clinging to the floor and returning fire.

SCOTSDALE, Pa., July 6—(INS)—Posterity in Pennsylvania will not be without a memorial of one of the most famous of its numerous captains of industry—Henry Clay Frick.

At West Overholt, near here, the humble two-room abode wherein there was born the infant boy who later became "Frick, the Coke King," has been presented to the Historical Society of Western Pennsylvania. The birthplace of Frick was a springhouse on the Overholt estate. It was restored and kept up by Miss Helen Frick, the magnate's daughter, who came here from New York for the presentation ceremonies.

Frick, one of the many industrial geniuses developed by the rugged resources of Pittsburgh and southwestern Pennsylvania, was a dominating figure in steel and iron as well as the most powerful in the coke industry. The little red schoolhouse which Frick attended when a boy still stands today, scarcely a mile from the scene of his birth.

NEW CASTLE, Pa., July 6—(INS)—"Tabby," the pet cat of the police station, was rescued three times from a demented man who had a mania for killing cats. After escaping death thrice, "Tabby" was killed by an automobile.

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., July 6—(INS)—When he was locked in the Dunbar jail, Eugene Crawford, the red with drunkenness, knew how to have his thirst quenched.

When none of the officers heard his calls, Crawford found a long pole in his cell, pushed it through the bars and pressed a button which sounded a fire alarm. When the fire department arrived he got what he wanted.

SMETHPORT, Pa., July 6—(INS)—While visiting here Paul D. Hamlin, wealthy Chicago resident, discovered that the boys of the town did not have adequate grounds for a baseball park. Before he returned to Chicago, Hamlin donated $7,000 to the American Legion post here to be used as the basis of a fund to provide baseball field for the youngsters. Hamlin said he had to play ball on vacant lots 35 years ago.

ST. ANN'S WILL PLAY FIELD CLUB TOMORROW

(By T. M. June)

Baseball fandom is due to have a real treat of home town baseball tomorrow afternoon, on St. Ann's field, when St. Ann's meets the Field Club nine.

Both teams won six and lost one during the first half and this game will determine the winner. The Field Club is very anxious to throw some sand in front of Manager Sagolla's fast-going express train, which won its eighth straight victory last night.

The nines are evenly matched and with both managers putting in the best they have a good hard battle is expected. "Bill" Fine, considered by many fans as Bristol's hurling ace, will do the mound duty for the last year's champions. His opponent will be "Ironman" Tulio, who has won as many games as Fine, struck out the same number, but did not issue as many passes as "Bill." "Sam" Detrick will be behind Fine's shots, while "Jim" Stallone will be on the receiving end for the Dorrance Street boys.

"Monk" O'Riola will guard the initial sack for St. Ann's, and "Gyp" Fine will do the same for Field Club. "Socks" Seneca and "Chet" Beaton will be the keystone. "Shorty" Dugan and "Pete" Paletta will be the hot corner guardians. "Eddie" Roe will cover the shortstop territory for the "Saints," while "Russell" Arrison will most likely do the same for Field Club.

In the gardens the managers have the pick of several players. Manager Beaton can depend on McGlynn, Jones, Hibbs, McFadden, Cochrane and Beaton, while Sagolla may use Gilardi, Fields, Missera, De Risi, Pieo, or Quici.

The game starts at 3.30 p. m.

repair equipment, hangars, fire-fighting equipment, sleeping quarters.

"Bristol is practically in between—between New York to Washington and from Hadley Field at New Brunswick to Atlanta," added Mr. Gott. "It would be a splendid thing for the town, and one that would be of mutual benefit to both the townsfolk and the Keystone corporation."

"If the matter were to be seriously considered the Keystone plant would be willing and glad to cooperate with service clubs or others interested and find some tangible means for providing an airport for Bristol."

Hartzel Family Clan Against "Modified Wet"

PERKASIE, July 7.—Establishing a precedent for annual meetings of family associations, the Hartzel family reunion, composed of hundreds of members of German descent, the great majority of them "old line Democrats," recently voiced their opinion unanimously at the annual gathering of the clan against "wet" or "modified wet" platform that might be adopted by any Presidential candidate.

The clan met in Perkassie Park and Rev. S. S. Hartzel, of Bernville, Berks county, was the speaker. In his address he asked for an expression of opinion on the wet and dry question, and one man arose and emphatically expressed himself in favor of the dry issue.

"I hope you all feel the same way," said the Berks county clergyman. Then every person in the room arose and declared in favor of a bone dry platform.

Whether this means that members of the Hartzel family in Bucks, Berks, Montgomery, Chester, Lehigh and Northampton counties, most of them Democrats, will not vote for Governor "Al" Smith, was not ascertained, but it was intimated the "Hartzels will have nothing to do with a wet candidate."
